THE FURNITURE

What is different about Oxley's Furniture?

Oxley's Furniture is cast and fabricated from high-grade aluminium. Items are finished and coated as one whole piece and are designed to last indefinitely outdoors whatever the environment.

Where is the furniture made?

All the furniture is fabricated at the Cotswolds factory. From here the castings are welded together, pre-treated and then the final colour chosen by the customer is applied.

What materials and techniques do they use?

The furniture is made from aluminium castings welded together to form each individual item of furniture. The quality of aluminium and finishing process is the key to the longevity of the furniture. Oxley's components come from foundries where only the highest-grade aluminium alloys are used.

How is the furniture finished?

Furniture finishes are high-grade architectural polyester powder paints that are applied electrostatically and cured in high temperature ovens. Oxley's specialise in paint effects that give their elegant designs greater visual depth. All cushion fabrics used in the upholstery of their furniture is manufactured to last years without losing its colour and durability in an exterior environment.

How different can each customer order be?

With all the different designs of furniture, a vast array of metal colours available and cushions made from fabrics which can come from the many different fabric houses, it is easy to see that each set of furniture leaving the factory is unique.
